STORED GRAIN INSECTS REPORTED

Insects are reappearing in stored grains that have been fumigated in some areas of the state, report entomologists at VPI.

Although unfortunate, this is a normal situation. This far south stored grains have to be fumigated a varying number of times for adequate protection. The number of times depends on several factors, such as storage facilities, temperature, and the thoroughness of application.

The entomologists point out that fumigants are effective only so long as a lethal dose is present, unless there has been a complete kill. If one to several insects in the stored grain are not killed, or they enter from outside or other sources, then a new build-up in population is likely. The length of time before damage from reinfestation becomes evident may be short. Stored grains should be checked regularly, probably weekly, for damage, even after fumigation.

Ask your county agent for details on control of insects in stored grains.

WINTER CARE OF FARM MACHINERY PAYS DIVIDENDS

Proper winter protection of farm machinery will extend the life of the machinery up to 30% and will save time when it is needed next spring, say VPI agricultural engineers.

They recommend that machinery be kept under shelter when not in use. Bright metal parts, such as the plow wings, mower sickles, cultivator points, and other working parts should be greased to prevent rusting. Rubber tires should be blocked up to take the weight of the machine off of them while in storage.

Auxiliary motors should have gasoline drained out. Remove spark plugs and drop three ounces of cylinder, oil in each cylinder and turn the motor over three times.

All motors not in use during winter should have all water drained out and the petcock left open or the plug out. Put a rag in the exhaust pipe to keep out moisture. Lubricate all grease cups on machinery when it is put in storage. Charge up all batteries in use and take the terminals off from the motor.

While machinery is in storage inspect it for worn and broken parts and list the repairs needed so it can be made before the machine is needed next spring.

NUT MEATS — GOOD BAIT

The traditional cheese-eater, the mouse, is a glutton for some other foods.

For instance a small piece of nut meat makes an excellent mouse bait, say rodent control specialists at VPI. It will be easy to rid the house or basement of mice by setting four to six mouse traps baited with nut meats. Mice eat very little, and if the nut meat is securely fastened to the trap you can often catch two or three mice with the same piece of bait.

Mice also like peanut butter. Mix it in a little cotton for easier handling.

Be sure to set the traps in runways where there are mouse droppings or other signs of mouse activity. Mice do not travel far unless they are really hungry.

C. M. Rush is now employed by Shell Oil Co., of Lynchburg.

If a newborn eight pound human baby grew as fast as a modern broiler chick, he'd weigh over 200 pounds in ten weeks, says Lee W. Herrick, associate poultry husbandman at V P. I.

Play safe—drive carefully.

LYE TREATMENT WILL INCREASE LIFE OF MILKING - MACHINE RUBBER

Milk quality will improve, and milking - machine rubber parts will last longer, if you boil the rubber parts in a strong lye solution for 15 minutes each week.

Guy Nargeotte, associate dairy husbandman at VPI, says a set of rubber parts that look perfectly clean before treatment will sometimes release enough butterfat to make a small cake of soap.

Treatment is simple. Place in a granite ware pan or a crock enough water to cover all the rubber parts. Add 8 level teaspoonfuls of household lye for each gallon of water. Heat to a boil and maintain boiling for 15 minutes. Remove from the heat and allow to cool to room temperature.

When cool, remove the rubber parts and scrub them well in warm water containing washing powder. Rinse them well and let them dry.

Two sets of rubber parts are suggested for each milking machine. One set is used while the other is being treated. When handled in this manner, two sets of rubber parts will outlast three sets that are used continuously. When rubber parts become visibly cracked, they should be discarded and replaced. Cracked rubber parts cannot be cleaned properly and are a troublesome source of high bacteria counts.
